ABSTRACT

Allogeneic Dentin Graft for Guided Bone Regeneration in Dental Implants

Dr. In-Woong Um. DDS, Ph.D, Korea Tooth Bank

Dr. Jay Hansel Tabije. DDS, Philippine College of OMFS

Studies on allogeneic demineralized dentin matrix (Allo-DDM) implantation in the 1960s and 1970s provided robust preclinical evidence of osteoinduction and negligible antigenicity in an extraosseous site. Recently, applications of Allo-DDM at skeletal sites have been studied at the Korea Tooth Bank, providing reliable evidence regarding safety issues such as antigenicity and virus validation for preventing disease transmission, leading to KFDA approval as a medical device. In this presentation, I will introduce several types of dentin grafts, including powder and moldable forms which are sticky and easy to handle, allowing for adaptation to large defects, as well as block and rhBMP-2 incorporated dentin. These grafts have been used for guided bone regeneration (GBR) in dental implants, and I will discuss their long-term clinical results.
